

Jean Stevenson: Re the droid issue, I still say they are just machines. "Feeling beings, cognizant of their own important as well as their own danger"? Yes, but this is programming! Take the programming away or turn the off button and you got a hunk of metal. Reprogram? Presto, a whole different animal. They don't come by these characteristics naturally, from within themselves, through learning and growing.

On your paragraph about no nice people being involved with a crime lord and somebody dropping a bomb on Jabba's palace... Uh--you got a point there. I have decided that Luke checked all that out and pre-determined that there were no good guys there before he went in.

On the incest theme--yes, Luke hugs Leia. He hugs Han, too; he loves them and they, him. Yes, he jumps on the speeder bike behind Leia. What should he have done? There wasn't time to tell Han to do it. And it would have looked silly if he'd stood there saying, "There goes Leia. She's your girl friend, so you go with her." As far as jumping in between them in the Ewok Village, they were all in danger, they've all been set free. Why shouldn't all three greet each other joyously? Han and Leia didn't seem to mind. I know if I were in a similar situation, I would not hesitate to "jump in between" my brother and his lover, even if they were kissing! Nope, I don't buy Luke not wanting to acknowledge Leia as his sister because of incestuous feelings. I mean, he couldn't tell her about being her brother without explaining dear ol' dad, too. Would you be anxious to tell a loved one their father was the notorious DV? Not me, boy! However, I am not so naive as to believe Luke's feelings magically disappeared as soon as he heard the word "sister." My personal opinion is that he realized in TESB that Leia loved Han and always would and dealt with and got over his sexual feelings for her by the time ROTJ came along.

Also, how interesting about the dialogue recording "The Story of Return of the Jedi". I haven't heard it, so I can't comment, but very interesting.

May I add my enthusiastic applause for the recent contributions from Liz Sharpe and Ellen Randolph. All I can say is "Write more! Now, please!"

Call me irresponsible--call me a fool, but I enjoy the articles on actors and what they're doing now. I don't even mind reading about movies and books other than SW, in limited doses, of course. Speaking of which, anybody out there see ENEMY MINE? How about the AMAZING STORIES episode starring Mark Hamill called "Gather Ye Acorns"? Any comments on either?

Cheree, really hooted at your Christmas cartoon. Until next time, peace and good health to you, Cheree, and all of you out there, too!

P.S. To whoever it was put there (can't remember) who defined RAEBNC, thanks!

P.P.S. Cheree, do I get the "Under-the-Wire Award" this time?

((Ed: Well, I guess since you hand-carried it over and said "pretty please..."))

'Dune' author Frank Herbert dies at 65 after surgery

Associated Press

Frank Herbert

MADISON, Wis. — Science-fiction writer Frank Herbert, whose best-selling Dune told of a harsh desert planet and its people, the intrigues of an interplanetary empire, and a mysterious spice that made a young duke able to see the future, has died at the age of 65.

Herbert, of Mercer Island, Wash., died Tuesday at University of Wisconsin Hospital of a blood clot near his lungs while recuperating from cancer surgery, said hospital spokeswoman Christine Chantry. He discovered late last year that he had cancer.

He had been working with his son, Brian, on the seventh novel in his Dune series and several other projects at the time of his death, said Kirby McCauley, Herbert's literary agent in New York.

"It came as a shock to me," McCauley said. "I thought he was on the mend."

Dune, Herbert's best-known novel, has been translated into 14 languages and has sold more than 12 million copies since it was published in 1965. It was the first book in what began as a trilogy and grew to six novels, and became a cult favorite.

"Dune," another name for the fictional planet Arrakis, is the focus of galactic battle and intrigue because it is the source of a hallucinogenic spice, produced by a giant desert worm, that prolongs life and is essential to space navigation. The spice made the young duke Paul Atreides able to see the future.

Critic John Clute wrote in the Washington Post that Herbert's "adroit mix of religion, ecology, space opera, Arabs, giant worms, longevity drugs, politics, dynastic wars, extrasensory power and sex showed just how exhilarating the science fiction romance of conceptual breakthrough could be."

His first novel, Dragon in the Sea, was published in 1955. Dune was rejected by 20 publishers before one accepted it. In all, he wrote more than two dozen books.

Herbert had been going to the University of Wisconsin's Hospital and Clinics for treatment, and returned there about two weeks ago, Doughty said. The medical center has an extensive cancer research facility.

Herbert is survived by his third wife, Theresa, a daughter and two sons.
